RE: Climbability sample
From: Tony Leto, The Wagner Companies

At today's CTC meeting, I mentioned that I had this morning done a sort of one of the CPSC data reports and made an attempt to trim it down. I am providing it here for your reference since it allows you to view a smaller sample than what you would be faced with in reviewing the database that was submitted by Tom Zuzik.

- Here are my parameters:
 - I limited the data to ages older than one and younger than three.
 - I deleted duplicates and reports that referenced "fall through"
 - I kept anything that referred to climbing, jump from, fall from or fall over.
 - I included reports that indicated climbing of furniture or toys for review.

You will notice that I left in references to fall from porches even though most porches may not even have a guard in place and may simply be a few inches above the level the child fell onto. The list totals 320 incidents that potentially were the result of guard climbing over a time span covering Feb 1989 to November 2000 – 29 incidents/year.

Again, our concern remains that few of these reports indicate whether a guard had any part in the fall. Any assumption that the guard was the primary means of getting over is just that – an assumption. The questions remain: Was there a guard in place?; Did it meet code?; How high was it?; and What was the infill design?

This information is not definitive. I am providing it to give the committee a feeling for the available data.
